What's New in the?

Deleting files is one of the toughest chores many of us have to deal with. We are not supposed to touch it, so it's normal that most users just leave their machine full of useless and big-size files. That's why is worth pointing out that Remove Files is a useful application for those who can't stand not having a free space on their disk. Not only does it allow you to delete specific files, but it can also allow you to schedule files for deletion, freeing up space. With Remove Files you can choose to schedule file deletion at a specific day, week, month or year. Once the files have been set for deletion, you can also choose to automatically delete them. Another Battlefield clone! This time it is the 2008 game "BF4" a clone of "Battlefield 3". So far we have two "Battlefield" clones out there. One is "Battlefield 3" the other is "Battlefield 4". Both are being made by a company called DICE and both are really good and good looking games, so if you like "Battlefield" you should give these two games a try. Q: How to get an array from excel with different indexes in VB.Net? I am trying to get the values from an excel sheet like this (values may vary): Excel Sheet I want to get a string array like this (string array may vary): String array I tried using File.ReadAllLines() and reading data into a StringCollection like this: Public Shared Sub Main() Dim ck As New Excel.Application() Dim ws As Excel.Workbook = ck.Workbooks.Open("C:\Users\david.moser\Desktop\Test\Test2.xlsx") Dim wb As Excel.Workbook = ck.Workbooks.Open("C:\Users\david.moser\Desktop\Test\Test2.xlsx") Dim ws1 As Excel.Worksheet = wb.Worksheets("Sheet1") Dim cl As Excel.Collection Dim row As Excel.Range cl = ws1.UsedRange For Each row In cl MsgBox(row.Value.ToString()) Next End Sub The above code returns just the first row of the sheet. Is there a way to get a complete string array with all the data of the excel sheet? A: .ReadAllLines can return multiple lines from a file, but the data returned for each line is accessed by using the row.Cells
