Q: Django : query in view.py giving error Below is my code in view.py total_id = Request.GET.get('id', 0) m =

Message.objects.all().filter(thread=True).filter(id=total_id).filter(from_id=total_id) I need the m to be printed out for debugging to see what the output is. So after running the function, the below error is showing- Query set must be same size as the QuerySet. Any ideas to why am I getting this error. Thanks, A: So after debugging, I could see the reason for this is that when there is a filter on id it means that in the query you should have set a condition on it. total_id = Request.GET.get('id', 0) m =

Message.objects.all().filter(thread=True).filter(id=total_id).filter(from_id=total_id) The above line should be changed to- m =

Message.objects.all().filter(thread=True).filter(id=total_id) Reason why this is happening is that we have to use.filter(id=total_id) instead of.filter(id=total_id,.....). ST. ALAMEDA – You could hardly blame Raiders coach Dennis Allen for taking a pass on fourth-round draft pick Ereck Flowers after his disastrous rookie season. There's a good chance the sixth-year Raiders coach will opt for a similar strategy regarding 2012 first-round pick Khalil Mack. The two edge rushers will be the only offensive pieces on the roster whose names were blanked on the final roster before the team trimmed its roster to 53 Saturday. Mack, who was a second-team All-Pro, is an explosive pass-rusher who can stuff the run and wreck games on a hot streak. He has a legitimate chance to be the Raiders' cornerstone. Flowers, who began training camp on a four-game suspension, had a disastrous rookie year, collecting just three sacks and failing to disrupt the pocket. The future looks dim for Flowers. When you have a gaping hole at tackle, you have to take a shot on a better-than-average defensive tackle. Oakland's system and unit featured two right guards, three center linebackers and just one right tackle. Flowers' future with the Raiders could be in jeopardy, depending on his performance during camp and the practices for the past two weeks. Flowers had one good season at Syracuse before the Raiders draft pick. Flowers made significant strides from 2010 to 2011, but he'll have to duplicate that magic in three years. With the Raiders, it will be harder for him to adjust to a different system. Flowers was one of the most athletic players in the 2010
