This brush-vacuum assembly can be self-propelled, as on a floor sweeper, or propelled by a non-self-propelled vehicle, such as a truck, or as on a upright vacuum. In order to provide more power, the brush-vacuum assembly usually is powered by a high-voltage motor. The high-voltage motor is highly electrically and electromagnetically reactive. The electrical and electromagnetic fields generated by the motor can cause harmful effects to the operator, other components of the vacuum cleaner, or the material being cleaned. There have been proposals to limit the exposure of the operator to harmful electromagnetic fields. One such proposal provides a shielded cabinet for the vacuum cleaner. A power supply can be disposed in the cabinet, and a high-voltage circuit can be disposed between the power supply and the high-voltage motor. One problem with such an arrangement is that the vacuum cleaner components must be attached to the cabinet. This adds to the complexity, size, and cost of the vacuum cleaner. Another problem is that the cabinet must be shielded against the electromagnetic fields generated by the high-voltage circuit. Yet another problem is that a high-voltage power supply can only be mounted inside the cabinet. This limits the physical location of the power supply and makes it somewhat difficult to replace the power supply, such as with rechargeable batteries. Another problem with such an arrangement is that the high-voltage circuit generates a large amount of heat which must be dissipated to prevent overheating.Sunday, May 26, 2007 Last Stitch!! The antiarrhythmic efficacy of quinidine and procainamide was studied in rats chronically implanted with 24-hour electrocardiogram recording system. The drug was administered intravenously in a dose of 300 mg/kg. It was found that both drugs decreased sinus bradycardia. The highest antiarrhythmic efficacy was found during procainamide administration. In the form of a capsule, quinidine was more effective than procainamide in increasing sinus cycle length and the PR interval. United States Court of Appeals Fifth Circuit F I method for degrading plastic fibres, and more particularly, to an environmentally friendly method for degrading plastic waste fibres in large quantities on a commercial scale. 2. Description of the Prior Art Plastic waste has been one of the major environmental contaminants for years. Each year a large number of tons of waste are created from used garments, manufacturing scrap, and other plastic materials in the form of plastic fibres, plastic films, and other related waste plastics. The fibrous materials are unsightly and present a serious waste disposal problem for those companies, municipalities and individuals responsible for managing
