{#sp6.362} {#sp7.363} NORFOLK — Norfolk police officers did a better job patrolling the city Thursday night, but they may have to do it even more often in the future. Videos recorded by a pair of cameras installed to supplement the city's current police force have been released publicly. One of the cameras, focused on the Woodburn Bridge where car jackings and other crimes are often reported, was first installed in October 2010, when Norfolk was still a one-person operation. The secondary camera, installed this year, shows the city's downtown police force working around the clock. "I think it's a positive because it gives us an opportunity to show the quality of our police and to show what the officers are doing, the results they're getting and how they're getting
