You should be prepared for some disbelief when you claim that a dog medicine saved your life and the lives of others, but Joe Tippens claims that it saved his life and the lives of others. Even cancer researchers today are considering the idea that it could be real. It was all over my stomach, my neck, my liver, my pancreas, my bladder, my bones, Tippens said.

The fenbendazole controversy involved a situation in which patients were given incorrect information that the anthelmintic fenbendazole, which is used to treat different parasites in dogs, can cure terminal lung cancer. ## ry & More

Joe was an executive and financial strategist with more than 30 years of expertise. He co-founded SCG Advisors LLC (Vero Beach, FL), an investment management company, and served as its CEO for the previous 13 years.

As a result of the extensive confusion it produced, fenbendazole was sold out at pharmacies all around South Korea. Contrary to popular belief, Joe Tippens took part in the Kitruda clinical study at the MD Anderson Cancer Center, and his recovery was probably brought on by immuno-cancer medications.

Therefore, at the beginning of the situation, South Korean health officials and experts issued news releases warning about adverse effects on September 23, 2019, but cancer patients disregarded them. As an alternative, people were curious about a famous Korean comedian who was on fenbendazole. The misleading information persisted until the famous person said "it is ineffective."

Tippens claimed that two years ago, he was instructed to go home, contact the hospital, and say his final goodbyes. All of the doctors agreed that he would pass away from small cell lung cancer.

According to Tippens, "once that form of cancer spreads that far, the chances of survival are less than 1%, and the typical life expectancy is three months." Read below regarding joe tippens obituary.
